The science behind environmental solutions

For more than 30 years, the Cary Institute has been a global leader in ecosystem science and the application of that science to environmental policy. Areas of expertise include disease ecology, freshwater and forest health, climate change, urban ecology, and invasive species. We work across ecosystems: forests, rivers, lakes, and cities. The Institute has national standing, local roots in the Hudson Valley, and a global reach with projects on five continents.

As an independent, not-for-profit organization, the Institute produces unbiased research findings that lead to more effective management and policy decisions.
